RULE 26: WATER HAZARDS (Including Lateral Water Hazards)

By DAVE DONNELLY Manager, Competitions, USGA

The first code of Rules, written in 1744 in Edinburgh, Scotland, told what to do if a player's ball "comes among Watter, or any Wattery Filth." The procedure was to bring the ball behind the hazard and "allow your Adversary a Stroke."

The most significant addition since those early days came from recognizing that when a hazard runs along the side of a hole, it isn't always practicable to drop a ball behind it. So there are two types of water hazards — a water hazard (marked by yellow stakes or lines) and a lateral water hazard (red stakes or lines) with additional relief options.

The first thing that must be determined is whether your ball is in the hazard. The Rule says there must be "reasonable evidence" that the ball is in the hazard; what that really means is that you must be virtually certain. If it's possible the ball could be anywhere else, you may not proceed under this Rule.

If a player finds his ball in the hazard, he may play it as it lies. (Rule 26-2 covers what happens if he tries and ends up deeper in the hazard or out of bounds.) There are four ways of taking relief with a one-stroke penalty, but two apply only to lateral water hazards.

The first option is going back and playing a ball as nearly as possible at the spot from which the original ball was last played. The second allows the player to drop a ball behind the water hazard, keeping the point at which the original ball last crossed the margin of the water hazard directly between the hole and the spot on which the ball is dropped, with no limit to how far behind the water hazard the ball may be dropped. To clear up a common misconception, it should be noted that this is not the same as the line of flight.

The options available only for lateral water hazards are dropping a ball outside the water hazard within two club-lengths of and not nearer the hole than (i) the point where the ball last crossed the margin of the water hazard or (ii) a point on the opposite margin of the water hazard equidistant from the hole.
